

Palliative care and poetry

Introduction

“Anima in motion, to infinity, with sense. I feel worthy until the last moments; I wish more than sighs: life.”

User embracement is an action of approach. It means “being with” and “being near”, in other words, it is an attitude of inclusion, of being related to something or someone. It is a lightweight technology that comprises the relationship between the teams and the users and aims to reverse the logic of organization and operation of health service. Its principles are: ensuring universal access, reorganizing the work process based on a multidisciplinary team and qualifying the relationship between health professional and patient.<sup>1</sup>

Thus, the term “user embracement” is understood in both spatial dimension (a formal reception and a comfortable environment) and administrative dimension (transfer to specialized services). The poetic language must be used as a tool for user embracement in the context of Palliative Care, as it associates care and affection, providing a sensitive and human communication channel. It is a toast to life because it becomes one of the essential elements for an adequate palliative care, which makes all the difference in the countless forgotten, remembered or released stories. The poetic language associated with different expressions (photograph, fine art, music etc.) and used in the hospital daily life provides favorable results to the self-esteem and the preservation of the spirit of those who are being assisted by the health team.<sup>2</sup>

The care

Rudeness is like a petal that is detached from the rose in its natural state of beauty.

The patient

A slight sadness in the uncertainty
A word, only: the one for sure
A warmth, maybe some comfort
Something that cannot be translated
A delicate gesture beyond the petals spread
His black, assertive eyes
Slightly sad reveries

The Uncertainty

In the morning, the swing without a net
Nausea without vomiting
In the afternoon, soft, almost absent tears
At night, a dream full of intimate glances
He awakens with his mouth open and dry
Naked body
Clear robes on the floor
Windows slightly open, waiting
