

Healing and the Chakra System

Opinion

During my classes and workshops on the chakra system, I have consistently had students, attendees and clients end up sitting back in their chairs once they hear the list of typical life issues - emotional, mental and physical reactivity - all related to the relevant chakra, realizing beyond a shadow of any doubt, "Oh wow. There's something to this. That's me!" In no uncertain terms, they are then able to see their one or two or sometimes three major chakras that are presenting the life-long issues, and feel relief at this realization. Then they begin to receive the clearings for these issues, and they SEE the relief showing up in their lives.

The way I've come to understand from my own unique viewpoint and experiences ends up in a clear explanation and presentation of new possibilities for their lives to move out of something being wrong, (my first book written in my tenth year of Asia is entitled, What if There's Nothing Wrong?) and into the levels of thriving we're here to enjoy, and designed to be living at this time now, which I clearly outline in my second book, a #1 international best-seller, Vibrational Upgrade: A Conspiracy For Your Bliss; Easing Humanity's Evolutionary Transition, which contains too, stories from clients of mine who have moved into this thriving! We are in the time of humanity's awakening to something beyond the ego-mind that has been so cleverly cultivated in our post-modern times by our commercialization and consumer driven society. You can see this in the restlessness, discontent, tools of distraction and the search for what seems to get frequently termed, "my authentic Self."

During these immense times we're living in, science has proven the existence of this ancient system of the chakra column as tools have been created to measure subtle energies. Simultaneous to this, more people have been searching internally as well as externally, and so more people have been asking questions and therefore making changes in their lives supported by this ancient wisdom - and therefore assisting the entire world to change. More joy gets broadcasted out into the world through the joy you and your life radiates. And so the 100th monkey begins to roll through the globe, and increasingly, more and more people live from a possibilities based life, rather than a problems seeking solutions based life.

I've been working with this information, applying it and distributing it to my clients over the past 20 years, increasingly. This also includes now the premise that there is one dominant chakra for each individual for a lifetime. I discovered this premise during my yoga teacher training in India which I've found is beautifully aligned to the archetypes work, ultimately yielding an informative, thorough road map through which to gain a profile of one's self from the soul level on up to the emotional, mental and physical body. In fact, the chakra system as I've come to understand the human system from not only my 10 years living in Asia studying the subtle energy system, meditation, Buddhism, food as medicine, tonic herbalism and holistic health practices, is a sound system through which to more embody enlightenment and emotional, mental and physical well-being, health and vitality.

Opinion

Volume 4 Issue 5 - 2016

Alison J Kay*

Alternative Medicine Practitioner, USA

Corresponding author: Alternative Medicine Practitioner and Holistic Life Coach, Energy Healer, USA, 2760 Daniel St, Clearwater, FL 33761, USA, Tel: +1 727-712-1475; Email: ajkbliss@gmail.com

Received: December 06, 2016 | Published: December 21, 2016

Let me share some information about the chakras that will illustrate how important it is to balance and heal these subtle energies. The chakra system is frequently dismissed as a new-age theory of "fluff" in Western society, which overlooks the systematic, reliable road map this is as the intersecting points of mind, body and spirit. Ignoring the ancient but now more relevant than ever before wisdom and guidance the chakra system provides is at this point, not only ignorant, but detrimental to our moving forward into more health, vitality, vibrance, balance and well-being in mind, body, emotions, money, career, relationships, one's authenticity, one's empowerment to not only have clarity about one's authentic fulfillment, but also really reaching into the question of "What else is possible for me and my life to thrive?"

The word chakra is Sanskrit for wheel. Chakras are centers of activity that receive, assimilate and express life force energy. The ancient Hindu chakra symbols represent these circular centers of energy, and they correspond to the nerve plexuses and organs in the physical nervous system. By focusing on these energy centers, and understanding the function of each, we are able to balance our entire mind-body-spirit system, augmenting all areas in our lives, and facilitate healing.

More specially, chakras are responsible for the person's physical, mental, spiritual and energetic functions, organized in such a way that each of them connects to a septic domain of the human experience, say spiritual awareness or love or sexual energy expression or self-worth as expressed with choices made in the physical world such as work or basic survival issues. Thus, the chakra system is able to be a psychology system for the soul, because it functions at such a fundamental level of existence, within the subtle energy realm. This is also why the concept of each person having one dominant chakra with which to focus on is Even more informative about the psychology of a person's soul, that then yields information about their particular life issues within each of the realms of the human experience: physical, mental, emotional and energetic. This then filters into our daily life experiences within our work, our family, our relationships, our finances, and our community.

Let's back up, and make this more tangible and linear to follow. Chakras are energy centers that run along the spine, or the central nervous system. Today there are now studies that have validated the chakra system on the spine; Candace Pert has discovered that the key nodal points - clusters of huge numbers of neurotransmitters receptors so that it is a main center of communication exchanged between the mind and body - that are also where the ancient Hindu chakra system have each of the seven chakras located.

The chakras have also now been understood to correspond with the endocrine system - which is the master command center of the human body for our hormones; our endocrine system is the regulator of our body's hormones - which runs everything in our bodies not considered a part of the messaging system of the nervous system. So the chakras cover our two major command centers for all mechanical processes within the human body. The chakra system is so much more than what has previously been considered within our culture.

On the level of less gross or less dense and physical and more subtle energy, chakras also give admission to levels of soul information, energy and power. But this is not only limited to the individuals system when alone, it is also how the individuals system is when out in the external environment, interacting with others and the environment. Think power struggle issues, for example, or a strong feeling to stay away from someone. Specially, both the second chakra, located at the sacrum, and the sixth chakra, located in between the eyebrows, is considered intuitive centers within the chakra system. The lower abdomen connects to our concept of "gutinstincts" or a bodily knowing, while the sixth chakra, frequently referred to as the "third eye" senses out intuitive information that is more on the realm of mental, or consciousness - seeing into the situation with intuition/insight, or as some know it to be, psychic abilities. If either of these chakras are one's dominant chakra, then that means perhaps that a person will have a finer sense of intuition, and this will figure into the way the person lives their life with his or her job, relationships, community, education, interests etc. If a person's second chakra is shut down, then this means that their sense of "gut knowing" or "instinct" is also going to be shut down, or not reliable for information that is accurate. This could lead them into relationships with others who are dangerous for them, or pose a threat that they would've heard had they been in tune with their second chakra open and balanced. At this level, we are talking about more patterned, habitual behavior, or situations, using the chakra system to help better inform us in a holistic and complete way.

Thus, it is a more encompassing psychology than that just of the conscious and even subconscious mind, as it goes beyond this, and into a level of ourselves where our individuation from a higher source begins, but not yet at the small personality and small mind level of the individual human body. Yet it's not only soul psychology, because it is a system that is solidly interacting and linked in with the physical body's system as well. It's that the chakra system runs at such a foundational level of existence and thus affects every plane above it - emotional, mental and physical - that it is an over-reaching "psychology" system, stemming from the soul, but nonetheless that has physical effects, such as a physical disease, for example.

So again, when we work within the chakra system, we are working at a baseline of the human being, gaining understanding of what is contributing to the current situation. My healing work is focused on helping to bring this information forward to you both through my one on one energy medicine sessions and group healing work. Thus, what already is being "said" in your system through the events in your life is what will be brought forward and communicated to you. My job is to act as a facilitator to connect to this level of yourself, translate this symbolic, and at times rather cryptic, encoded information to you, and clear the way for you to reconnect to this level of yourself. (This paragraph could be stronger in the "I will clear and shift this for you with my techniques" message).

There is in fact a way to approach life that is proactive, lived with an awareness of the soul, so that one does not need pain or crisis or tragedy to flag their attention to the deeper levels of one's self. Interestingly though, when people are moving from one major life stage to another if they're not living with this aligned awareness to their soul - they need crisis to wake them up.

My desire is to help people thrive and not need struggle, illness, tragedy or crisis to force them to pay attention to the more subtle parts of themselves.

By keeping our chakra system aligned, balanced and flowing our life force energy up and down our spine, and therefore throughout not only our central nervous system, but also our sympathetic and parasympathetic nervous systems, our system is able to hum along with a vitality that perpetuates longevity and resplendent mental health.